“ Clair, before I was born, you became my Brother-in-law. For my whole life you've been my Brother-in-law. You didn't marry into MY family, I was born into YOURS. For me you've always been like an older Brother, never an in-law. And, just like an older Brother, and as with all the kids in the family, you relished every opportunity to beat me at every game, especially chess. You, a grown adult man, me a sweet innocent boy - you gave me NO breaks - you checkmated me every single game, and you LOVED it... I've NEVER forgotten that trail of defeat I endured in my childhood... although I did stop playing chess with you. Another earliest memory of my "Old" Brother-in-law was your love of comic books... and looking back on it, I realize that what you were compelled by in comics were the battles between Good and Evil. Every story was a clear, honest, fight to the finish between the overwhelming powers of the Darkest Villains against the Shining Hero fighting for the downtrodden, hard-working, common man and woman... Which of course describes exactly the life you chose for yourself, fighting for the workers against the Dark and Evil Management... And finally, I'm thankful I got to hang out with you at Spud Muffin's... not nearly enough times... Now, you're not gonna be there anymore, our lives have become way less for it.
